Hafsat, 19, goes to a health facility to learn about PrEP services. While in the waiting area she hears a health care provider shouting at a young woman in the consultation room, saying the girl must be 'promiscuous' to be requesting for PrEP at her age. Hafsat decides to leave the health centre.

How may Hafsat feel? What might happen to Hafsat next? What could have gone differently?

Both participants answer

Lynda celebrated her 17th birthday at a café with her girlfriends. Her girlfriends encouraged her to be more adventurous now that she is almost an adult. That night, Lynda decides she is ready to start having sex with her boyfriend. She calls her "Aunty" Rose, 28, for advice. She feels she can confide in her more than anyone else she knows. But this time, Rose threatens to tell Lynda's parents.

Lynda feels betrayed but she remembers Rose telling her to at least go to the health centre for condoms before making any decisions. Lynda decides its worth visiting the health centre first.

How may Lynda be feeling when entering the health centre? What should the provider who meets Lynda do?

Both participants answer

Sarah and Olu, 21, were high school sweethearts who married as soon as they completed secondary school. Together, they decided Olu would go to college in Smallville, over 12 hours away, while Sarah stayed back at her family home to care for their two-year old daughter. Olu comes home every three months, but Sarah wishes she could see him more.

When Sarah heard her friend, Victoria, recently tested positive for HIV, Sarah grew worried. Victoria's husband studies at the same college as Olu. Sarah decides to go to the health centre to ask about PrEP, but she is afraid her husband may feel offended if she tells him.

What should the provider who meets with Sarah suggest? How may Sarah consider bringing this up to her husband?

Both participants answer
